- IV. There is a plethora of studies on job satisfaction but it is very difficult to measure, however there are some factors which influence the Job satisfaction. Identify these factors.

As work is an important aspect of people's lives and most people spend a large part of their working lives at work, understanding the factors involved in job satisfaction is crucial to improving employees' performance and productivity.

Factors affecting the level of job satisfaction are;

Working Environment, Fair Policies and Practice, Caring Organization, Appreciation,

Pay, Age, Promotion, Feel of Belongings, Initiation and Leadership, Feel of Being Loved.

Safety and Security, Challenges, Responsibilities, Creativity in Job, Personal Interest and Hobbies, Respect from Co-Workers, Relationship with Supervisors, Feedback, Flexibility, Nature of Work.

- V. Globalization refers to the tendency of firms to extend their sales, ownership, and manufacturing to new markets abroad. Demonstrate this trend of openness that shapes human resource management with examples.

Answer: For business people, globalization means more competition, which results in more pressure to be 'world-class' - to lower costs, to make employees more productive, huge market place, increasing the intensity of competition in wide range of manufacturing and service industries, millions of new consumers, new and powerful global competitors at home, and to do things better and less expensively. Companies expand abroad for several reasons. Sales expansion is one. E.g. Walmart in South America, Dell produces PCs in China.

Firms go abroad for other reasons. Some manufacturers seek new foreign product and services to sell, and to cut labor costs. Thus, some apparel manufacturers design and cut fabrics in Miami, and then assemble the actual products in Central America, where labour costs are relatively low. Sometimes, it's the prospect of forming partnerships that drives firms to do business abroad. When IBM sold its PC division to the Chinese from Lenovo, it did so partly to cement firmer ties with the booming China market.

Toyota produces Camry in Kentucky.

Free trade areas – agreements that reduce tariffs and barriers among trading partners further encourage international trade. NAFTA (the North American Free Trade Agreement) and the EU (European Union) are examples.

Companies must be more cost-effective, organized around empowered teams, learners, more fiscally conservative, more scientific in making decisions, organize fewer layers, human-capital oriented, quality conscious. Employers will therefore expect from HR management that they

a. focus on more big picture issues such as helping the company achieve its strategic goals, find new ways to provide transactional services such as benefits administration, create high-performance work systems, manage ethically, formulate practices and defend its actions based on credible evidences, have the proficiencies required to do these things, for instance, a command of strategic management and financial budgeting.

For consumers, it means lower prices and higher quality on products from computers to cars.

Students can elaborate the above mentioned points from their own experience.

III. Summaries impact of technology on Human Resource Management

Answer: The impacts of technology on HR are outlined below:

1. New skills required: As new technologies are developed and implemented, there is an urgent need to upgrade existing employee skills and knowledge, if the organisation wants to survive and flourish in a competitive world.

2. Downsizing: Increased automation has reduced the number of employees in many organisations. The pressure to remain cost effective has also compelled many firms to go lean, cutting down extra fat at each managerial level.
3. Collaborative work: Technological changes have resulted in hierarchical distinctions being blurred and more collaborative teamwork, where managers, technicians and analysts work together on projects.
4. Telecommuting: The rapid advances in technology have led to the relocation of work from the office to the home. Telecommuting has become the order of the day where employees work at home, usually with computers and use phones and the internet to transmit letters, data and completed work to the home office.
5. Internet and intranet revolution: Internet and information technology have enabled companies to become more competitive by cutting costs. In HRM, internets and intranets are being used to handle training, benefits administration, performance management, and outplacement functions in recent times.

In short, technology is changing the face of HRM- altering the methods of collecting employment information, speeding up the processing of that data, and improving the process of internal and external communication. It is also impacting the way the jobs are being processed with a view to achieve operational efficiency.

XIV. It is difficult to find the ideal candidate for a specific position — in 2018 almost 75% of employers struggled to fill positions with the right candidates. Regardless of the state of the economy and your talent pool, to succeed long-term, your business should be able to hire and retain the best, most talented employees. Prepare general guidelines for talent acquisition strategy for an organization to hire best people.

Cultivate four critical talent acquisition strategies to ensure you're finding the best people.

1. Align with your business goals.

Consider your business goals for the next one to five years, and use those objectives to tailor your acquisition strategy to meet those needs. While recruitment tends to focus on filling vacancies within departments, talent acquisition is more about considering how your company is going to expand long-term, and then finding employees who can help take you there.

2. Use data and marketing to create better acquisition material.

Talent acquisition should be treated with just as much importance as any of your marketing campaigns. Convincing people to join your company is just as necessary as incentivizing people to buy your products.

There are plenty of different opportunities to use data to strengthen your talent acquisition strategy. For instance, you might use data to figure out where your top talent came from, and use that information to focus your talent acquisition efforts on certain academic programs or professional networking sites.

3. Expand outreach strategies.

To find better talent, need to expand your sourcing strategies.

Different skill sets require different methods of outreach. Find best marketers in a different place than best programmers, diversify sourcing approach.

4. Focus on better employer branding.

Employer branding is critical for creating a successful talent acquisition strategy — in fact, a 2017 LinkedIn study found that 80% of talent acquisition managers believe that employer branding has a big impact on their ability to hire remarkable talent.

When talented candidates are comparing companies, they're going to choose the one with the best values, culture, and work-life balance. By cultivating an impressive employer brand.
